Preface by Mr. Hamilton Bell.

To Japan must come, perforce, the student who wishes to investigate and enjoy the arts of the Far East, Chinese as well as Japanese. Since, while on the Asiatic continent these have to a great extent been trampled into dust by the passing centuries, in the Island Empire they have been piously preserved in the temples of the Faith to whose glory they were created.

In the year 1897, Japan with a wisdom we should do well to emulate, dedicated most of the works of art remaining in the temples, together with many of the structures themselves, as National Treasures ; thereby insuring their safe keeping for the benefit of posterity. Imperial museums were erected at Tokyo, Kyoto and Nara wherein a large number of the most precious are safely housed for better preservation than could be ensured in their original domiciles.

I count myself fortunate in being asked to introduce this book to the students of Far Eastern art. When I arrived in Japan it was the first thing for which I enquired ; and I was deeply disappointed to find that not even in Japanese was such a catalogue to be procured. To compile it Mr. Nakamura has had to search through files of government reports not easily obtainable, if at all, by the general public.

He as an official of the Imperial Museums had not only access to them but, most fortunately for us, possesses the expert knowledge and an acquaintance with English necessary to make them available by foreign students. And not to them only but to many of his own countrymen who will find in this catalogue an invaluable guide to their National Treasures not to be procured in their native tongue.

HAMILTON BELL.

Tokyo, Dec. 1914.

---

This catalogue is compiled in the hope that it may assist foreigners who are desirous of visiting the different temples in Japan wherein are preserved those works of sculpture and painting which have been designated by the Imperial Government as "Kokuhō"—National Treasures.

The list consists only of such objects as were selected as National Treasures purely for their artistic merits. All those being omitted which were included merely for their historical interest such as plans, maps, portraits, etc. having little or no artistic value.

The name of the artist is given in every case where, either the work is signed, or if unsigned is attributed by tradition to a certain artist; if no name is given it is to be understood that the artist is unknown.

Among the National Treasures, sculpture and paintings are divided into classes from first to fourth according to their artistic merits; this division has been recorded in the catalogue by the numbers 1, 2, 3, 4 before the title of each object.

N.B. The Government does not apply this division to those statues or paintings representing Shintoist or Buddhist Divinities which are venerated in the temples as the principal objects of public worship; the absence of a number before the name of any object indicated that it belongs to this class.

The characters p and s before the title of each object indicate the distinction either of sculpture or painting.

As a large temple such as Tōdai-ji or Hōryū-ji in Nara has many buildings in its enclosure and the images are installed in those different buildings, the author has, where he considers it necessary, added to the article, the name of the building where it is placed.

This catalogue contains those articles were selected by the Government as the National Treasures from the very beginning of the enactment of the National Treasures Preservation Law till the year of 1914. The author hopes to keep this catalogue always in completeness by adding to it from time to time those articles which shall be designated as National Treasures in future.

The index contains all the names of temples and artists which appear in this catalogue. The names of Chinese artists are given with Japanese pronunciation, most of them being also accompanied by the Chinese pronunciation in parenthesis.
